Kenya's draft Cancer Bill aims to increase Kenyans' access to cancer treatment.

- If passed, the legislation will help decentralize cancer treatment facilities so that Kenyans throughout the country can access proper care. Early diagnosis could save thousands of lives each year.
- The Cancer Bill will also provide funding for measures to improve Kenya's cancer treatment technology and to train more oncologists.
- Medical Services Minister Anyang Nyong'o has been instrumental in bringing attention to Kenya's need for improved healthcare. The Minister went public with his recent battle with prostate cancer and has helped raise awareness of the issues impacting diagnosis and care.
